White Tea	The most delicate of all teas. They have a subtle complexity &amp; natural sweetness. The youngest shoots of the plant are processed by hand. There is no oxidation.
Oolong Tea	These teas are only particularly oxidized. They possess some of the qualities of Green tea &amp; Black tea. They are known for their aromatic fruity &amp; sometimes sweet flavor.

Black Tea	Black Teas are fully oxidized, making them dark brown/black leaves. They have an earthy, malty robust flavor with a dark liquor.
PU-erh	These tea comes from the Yunnan province of China. Puer teas are aged making them prized for their medicinal properties. They can be strong or sweet.
Rooibos	Rooibos, popularly referred to as "red tea", is a caffeine free, needle-like bush from the Western Cape province of South Africa. Generally, the leaves are oxidized, giving way to its characteristic reddish brown color and nutty flavor.
Herbal Infusions	All herbal infusions are caffeine free. They normally require a longer steep time, to let the herbs saturate and release their goodness (5 - 10 min.)
